ANNOUNCEMENTS

Emerging Issue: Water Beads

This month, we want to call attention to Water Beads as an emerging product safety hazard to children. These small, often colorful, polymer balls are about the size of a sprinkle but expand dramatically when exposed to water. This poses serious injury risks to infants and small children who may ingest them, leading to bowel or intestinal obstructions. Such obstructions often require lengthy surgery to treat. There have also been reports of children being injured after placing water beads in their ears. Signs a child may have ingested water beads include but are not limited to trouble swallowing, abdominal pain and coughing/gagging. Parents and caregivers can learn more about water beads here.

TOP RECALLS

January 19, 2023 CPSC; Vaenait Baby recalled its Children's robes because they fail to meet the federal flammability standards for children's sleepwear, posing a risk of burn injuries to children. Units: About 2,400.
